A number of women and girls, way more than at least 50,000, were coerced into institutionalized sex slavery and human trafficking perpetrated by the Japanese military from 1932 to 1945.

Victims and survivors of sexual violence and a violation of human rights by the Imperial Japanese Army before and during WWII are still inflicted with painful, traumatizing, and indelible memories of the time.

Even now, the victims and survivors have been retraumatized by people within positions of power and privilege in our society who try to distort and deny the extensive historical evidence and ignore our mothers' and grandmothers' pains and wounds.

We invite you to our presentation in which we raise our awareness of the ongoing tragedies of survivors of sexual violence and discuss together what we can do to advocate for women's human rights and social justice at the individual and community levels.

Our guest speakers

Phyllis Kim

Phyllis Kim is an executive director of Comfort Women Action for Redress and Education (CARE). Phyllis Kim has been working to raise awareness about "comfort women" issues, a massive-scale institutionalized wartime sexual slavery during the Pacific War and WWII by Imperial Japan. CARE joined the movement through the campaign to pass US House Resolution 121 in 2007, and has been leading a number of campaigns to raise awareness about the "Comfort Women" issue in the US.
